Calling the 'Shots'

Known for his award-winning role as the serious but compassionate defense lawyer Bobby Donnell in the famous TV drama series, "The Practice," Dylan McDermott seems to take full authority in everything he encounters, both on-screen and in real life. This highly-driven and self-critical actor, whose somber and sound persona reflects in his fashion taste—dark classy designer outfits—has had his own share of dismal days, previously experiencing bad breaks and flops at the beginning of his acting career, and much earlier, clouded by his rough childhood with his mother's accidental death. But the incident only made him even more determined to succeed in Hollywood, and this particular experience may also be the reason behind his high regard for his relationship with his children. While still focused on his career, currently playing yet another "powerful" role as CEO Duncan Collinsworth in the new TV series, "Big Shots," Dylan considers his being a father to his kids the main priority. At 45, he is a parent (with ex-wife Shiva Rose) to two beautiful daughters—Colette, 11, and 2-year old Charlotte Rose—whom he dedicated his Golden Globe win to in 1999.
